Hmmmm green for how much longer? I am writing with my objections to the plan for Wisloe Green. There are so many I hardly no where to start. How about the already mega busy roads around here, gridlock on the A 38 is hardly a rare occurrence now, cars from hundreds of new housing can only add to that, as well as the air pollution which is inevitable especially from slow moving traffic. Then there is noise pollution, already a problem which can only escalate. With the almost definite advent of wetter weather due to the onset of global warming surely drainage is a serious concern as this area already suffers from water logged land (especially this year), the Green Field sites are a huge help in this and should be retained NOT built over. I understand that the vast number of houses planned is far in excess of the government requirements so why can much smaller numbers of houses be built over a wider area (there are surely some Brown Field sites available) instead of turning this area from a delightful rural community into a vast area of urban sprawl.

Can the already pressured public transport system cope with so many additional people? I think not, it struggles to cope with the ones already here...as do many other public services. In these times of environmental awareness should we not be aiming to limit the destruction of what is left of our green and pleasant land and build homes in smaller groups scattered across the area and not add yet another huge building site on one of the last remaining areas of natural beauty that gives breathing space to the land and the people already living here. Yours very sincerely [REDACTED]
